Swan Lake sets designed by New York City set designer Peter Dean Beck.

The Prologue set is a hard scenery unit which attaches to a rolling platform. Rothbart is standing on the rolling platform which has an escape stair to stage right. The unit has a hidden door in the painted stone wall for princess Odette to disappear and the swan Odette to appear. The unit is designed to play down stage in front of a traveler for a quick scene change.

Above: Act I drop without stage lighting. Act I palace exterior backdrop is designed as an outer border hung over a smaller backdrop which makes the design more flexible for different stage house sizes.

Above: Act I set design in performance with stage lighting

Above: Act II drop without stage lighting showing backdrop with outer tree border hung over the smaller lake backdrop for flexible use in stage houses. A moon box hangs behind the lake drop.

Above: Act III interior palace design photographed without stage light showing backdrop with outer palace ceiling border hung over the smaller palace window backdrop for flexible use in stage houses. The window is a painted scrim. The rolling unit used in the prologue and as part of Rothbart's rock unit is again used behind the window for Odette's reveal in Act III.
